Beverly Linder is a former teacher of grades ranging from first through eleventh. She has facilitated a number of seminars and workshops and has had the opportunity to share of her life's journey at women's luncheons and teas. Beverly is the mother of three children, two of whom were born with significant disabilities. She has a heart to share with other moms how strength can be found to "keep on keepin' on" from a Christian perspective. Bev lives in Colorado Springs.

Karen Leonard works part time as a counselor at a hospital and at a social service agency. She teaches psychology at the University of Phoenix and enjoys speaking at women's events. She also home schools her 13-year-old son, who has audio processing issues. At the upcoming workshop, she is looking forward to discussing practical ways parents can delight in and truly enjoy their kids. Karen lives in Santa Monica, California.

The term "special challenges" is very broad and refers to issues ranging from mild learning challenges to more severe disabilities—and everything in between.

Comments from moms and teachers who have attended a Special Heart workshop:

- Very good material! Thanks for sharing and being an advocate for moms!
- I was reminded that my son has many wonderful qualities rather than focusing on the negatives.
- You have spoken life into our difficult lives.
- I am looking forward to reading your book because there is so much rich, rich content.
- Positive, hopeful focus vs. all the hopelessness you may read in books.
- It's so good to hear the God-given wisdom and perspective from other moms!

Although the workshop is directed toward moms, teachers are welcome and will find the principles helpful in working with special kids. Certificates of completion are available.
